Less Is More: How To Simplify Your Life

ife today is complicated. Most Americans are pulled in multiple directions every day by commitments to their families, workplaces and communities.

Many people have responded to the pressures of modern life by seeking ways to consciously simplify their routines and attitudes at home and work.

"The goal of living a more simple life isn't to arrive at a static point in your life but to become skilled at balancing your personal relationships, workplace issues, finances and other demands," says Heather G. Mitchener, coauthor of The 50 Best Ways to Simplify Your Life.

Being in the moment

One way to simplify your life is to practice mindfulness—to slow down and recognize and appreciate the simple things in life. To be mindful instead of mindless, stay in the moment and be conscious of what you're doing. Don't think ahead or look back.

"When we look ahead constantly, we not only rush through the less pleasant tasks, we also tend to hurry through the things we love to do, because we're always thinking or worrying about what we have to do next," Mitchener says.

A good way to practice being in the moment is to follow your breath, a technique which doesn't require any special training or self-consciousness. To breathe mindfully, take notice of your breaths and try to make them as calm and even as possible. Your breaths should be long and slow and should come from your diaphragm rather than your upper chest. Pay attention to each breath, letting thoughts fall away.

"You can do this exercise any time you think of it," Mitchener says. "Make it a goal to be mindful, in general, but also set aside short periods to practice. This will improve your ability to make mindfulness a habit. As you learn to live this way, you'll feel more centered."

Slow down

If you feel like you have too much information in your life, stop subscriptions to magazines, newspapers or e-mail newsletters you rarely have time to read. Leave the radio and TV off unless you're really listening to something which matters to you. Turn off your cell phone unless you're making a call or waiting for an important one.

To reduce the amount of "stuff" in your home, ask yourself these questions before you buy something: Do I really need it? How often will I wear or use it? Where will I store it? Is there a reason why I must buy it?

Get organized

Begin by sizing up the problem areas in your home or workplace and making a plan of attack. If you're easily discouraged, start with a small, confined area, such as a single drawer. Otherwise, target an area which gives you the most grief. Your goal should be to clear out clutter that causes you to waste time—a hall closet which has become a catchall for everything from clothes to sports equipment.

Learn to focus at work. Multitasking can be an asset, but often the lack of focus it requires means you actually get less done in a day, or less done well. To increase your focus and break free from distractions:

- Begin each day by setting priorities on what you want to accomplish.
- Check e-mail at set times, rather than letting each new message interrupt you.
- Set aside a time to retrieve voice mail and return calls.
- Keep a calendar of your deadlines and obligations.

Seasonal Allergies: Prevention and Finding Relief

llergies affect more than 50 million Americans each year. Here are some tips to reduce exposure and get relief during the springtime allergy season.

Spring is here, but for allergy sufferers in California, it's not all sunshine and rainbows. The heavy rains we experienced in 2023 have fueled increased vegetation growth, leading to what's expected to be a higher amount of plant pollen, the most common source of seasonal allergies.

"It appears more people are already struggling with their allergies," said Salima Thobani, MD, an allergistimmunologist with Kaiser Permanente in Southern California. "Things are likely to be worse this season due to the very wet winter that we've had."

Prevalence of allergies

According to the Asthma and Allergy Foundation of America, more than 50 million Americans suffer from allergies each year, and allergies are the sixth-leading cause of chronic illnesses in the country. Seasonal allergies are especially common in the U.S., with roughly 19% of children and over 25% of adults experiencing them, according to the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention.

With the arrival of spring, Dr. Thobani noted allergies are likely to increase as the weather gets warmer and drier. This is because trees, grasses and weeds will release tiny grains into the air to fertilize other plants, and as we breathe them in, people who have allergies are likely to suffer, she explained. Allergy sufferers may experience a range of symptoms, including sneezing, itchy eyes, runny nose, headaches, fatigue, sore throat, congestion and coughing. Pollen can trigger other health conditions, including asthma and wheezing.

How to get relief from allergies

Dr. Thobani offers 5 helpful tips to help allergy sufferers reduce their symptoms and exposure to pollen:

- 1. Keep house and car windows closed and use your air conditioning.
- 2. Plan your outdoor activities to avoid high pollen counts which occur during midday or afternoons.
- 3. Wear a pollen mask or dust mask when pollen counts are high or during outdoor activities such as mowing the lawn.
- 4. Rinse eyes with cool water or saline eyedrops to remove clinging pollen after coming indoors.
- 5. Shower and change clothes after outdoor activities.

While there's no cure for seasonal allergies, Dr. Thobani notes that over-the-counter medications, such as antihistamines and nasal steroids, can provide relief and help you breathe a little easier.

Control Your Sugar Intake To Improve Your Health

mericans have steadily increased the amount of sugar in their diets over the past several decades, which has has contributed to the dangerous rise of obesity in the United States, putting more people at risk of chronic illnesses such as diabetes, heart disease and high blood pressure.

Both naturally-occurring and added sugars are present in the foods we eat. Natural sugars are found in basic foods like fruit and milk, while other sugars are added during food processing and preparation (like sweetening your coffee, soft drinks, baking desserts, cereal, candies, etc.).

The American Heart Association recommends that no more than half of your daily discretionary calorie allowance should consist of added sugars. (A person's discretionary calorie allowance is determined by several factors, including height and weight. Visit heart.org for details.) This means that the daily added sugar intake should be less than six teaspoons (24 grams or 100 calories) for adult women and less than nine teaspoons (36 grams or 150 calories) for adult men.

Some examples of food items with high sugar content include sports drinks (nine teaspoons of sugar in a 20 oz. serving), soda (roughly 10 teaspoons of sugar in a 12 oz. can) and flavored yogurts, even the low-fat variety (11 teaspoons of sugar in a cup). Read the Nutrition Labels to see how much added sugar per serving and how many servings are contained in the packaged food/drink you are consuming.

Know what you are eating

To control your intake of added sugar, it helps to know what you are eating! Use the Nutrition Facts label on prepared foods to help you work within the recommended sugar limits. Also, be sure to read the ingredients and choose whole-grain options when buying breads and pasta.

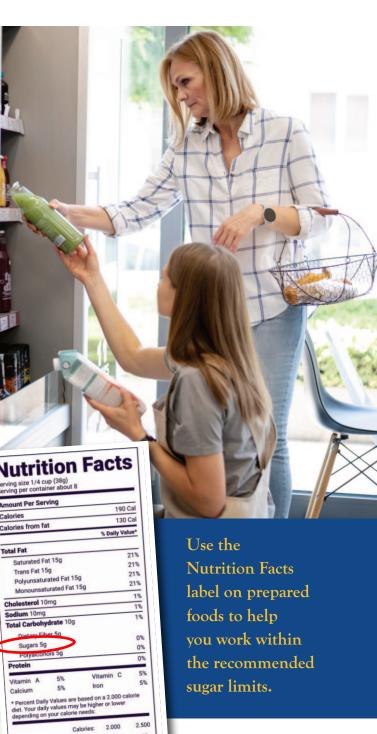

Some ingredients to look for in processed foods include:

- High fructose corn syrup
- Cane sugar or syrup
- Evaporated cane juice
- Rice syrup
- Molasses

Sugar-sweetened drinks are the main source of added sugar for most people. By choosing drinks that aren't sweetened, you can go a long way toward controlling your daily sugar intake.

Sugar substitutes, such as aspartame, should only be used in small amounts as research continues into their effects on the body.

Also, many people put themselves on restrictive diets in an attempt to lose weight or lower sugar consumption. However, without doing research or consulting with a doctor, you may put yourself on a path to eating more sugar than you normally would.

Grains as a replacement for meat will reduce fat intake but may also increase sugar consumption, especially refined carbohydrates like those found in white-flour pasta, which has more sugar than whole grains.

Be sure to read labels and choose foods and beverages with little to no added sugar to maintain a healthy lifestyle.
